Zoning Case is Resolved

A long-standing zoning dispute over a parking lot concluded last week following an agreement reached before a Monroe County judge.

C. Edward Hindle and his neighbors, Kenneth and Mary Louise Perry of Main Street, reached the agreement after three hours of negotiations before Judge Donald Wisner. Hindle said he would tear out a large part of his parking lot at his funeral home at 271 Main St.

The disagreement started in 1985 after Hindle installed 600 square feet of paving for parking in front of his funeral home. The Perrys complained the work was done without a building permit and encroached on their property.

Perry took the protest to the Village Board with trustees making a decision on both sides.

At one point Hindle removed a strip of the parking area that extended across the Perrys' property and planted a row of trees to shield the lot from view.

The Perrys continued their battle, noting that Hindle had built the lot with no permit. They brought a civil action against the village to compel enforcement of the zoning ordinance.

Last fall the village sued Hindle on the order of a Livingston County Court to take action.

Hindle, as his defense, claimed the zoning ordinance was invalid stating that a required county Planning Board advisory opinion was never obtained prior to adoption of the law in 1971.

Last week the Perrys, Hindle, their lawyers and the village attorney reached an agreement before Wisner with Hindle allowed to keep a parking space for use by the handicapped and 12 feet of the lot. The remainder is to be removed by May 1.

Changes are Made In Farm Program

More farmers in Livingston and Steuben counties may be eligible to participate in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) because of new rule changes.

Secretary of Agriculture Richard Lyng announced details of initiatives which provide incentives for greater tree plantings and for the improvement of the nation's water quality. Details have been forwarded to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office in Leicester.

The new rules change eligibility requirements for tree plantings and now include filter strips in the program. Under the old rules, two-thirds of a field had to be highly erodible to qualify for the CRP. For tree plantings, under the new rules, only one-third of the field must meet the criteria. In addition, the erosion criteria are changed from 3T to 2T or twice the normal soil loss tolerance for producers opting to plant trees.

Cropland acres used for filter strips next to streams, lakes and estuaries will be eligible for CRP even if the soil erosion criteria are not met. This change will permit farmers to enroll these acres in the CRP as a cost-effective way to keep nonpoint source pollution from emptying into water resources.

The sixth signup for CRP will be conducted Feb. 1-19. Producers may submit offers for either the 1988 or 1989 crop year.

Under the voluntary CRP, farmers enter into contracts to retire eligible cropland for 10 years. In return, the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) makes annual rental payments and share half the cost of establishing permanent grasses, legumes, trees, windbreaks and/or wildlife plantings on the land.

Filter strips, the new addition to the program, should improve water quality. These are grass strips that filter sediment and chemicals out of water runoff before they reach streams, lakes and rivers. These strips are cropland acres with widths that measure between 66 feet and 99 feet. Lyng said acres designated as filter strips must be adjacent and parallel to streams having perennial flow, seasonal flow or other water bodies of a permanent nature including wetlands. The permanent water bodies must be at least five surface acres in size.

Lyng also encouraged greater participation by state and private organizations in working with the Department of Agriculture and farmers to expand the CRP more rapidly by providing additional "piggyback" opportunities. These groups are encouraged to provide additional incentives to bring specific areas into the reserve. He said this can be accomplished by either sharing more of the cost of establishing cover or by offering "bonus" type incentives for CRP participation.

Additional information on how organizations can participate in the program can be obtained from State Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service Office.

Fire Hits Old Resort Building

Officials are continuing an investigation into the cause of a fire which leveled an abandoned building on the grounds of the former Macfadden Castle-on-the-Hill last Wednesday night.

Dansville Fire Chief Gary Welch said the old structure was engulfed by flames which volunteers arrived. A mutual aid call summoned assistance from the Sparta Center Fire Department and Wayland volunteers stood by at the Town Hall.

Dennis Mahus, who is assisting in the investigation, said part of the building had fallen down and there was no electric service to the structure. The building had formerly served as a laundry room at the health resort. It was located north of the old power house which was destroyed by fire about 18 years ago.

The former report complex on East Hill is now owned by Val Masur who resides in a home on the property.

Companies Bid Low On Area DOT Jobs

Low bids have been received on two State Department of Transportation (DOT) projects in Livingston County.

The Syracuse Rigging Co. Inc. had low bid of $789,489 to rehabilitate an existing single span thru-girder railroad bridge over Canaseraga Creek and reconstruct and rehabilitate an existing five-span thru-girder railroad bridge over the Genesee River (of Genesee and Wyoming tracks) in the Town of Groveland, the Village of Mt. Morris.

Rail traffic will be discontinued during the period of Apr. 1 to June 30 this year to accommodate the work. The project is scheduled for completion by July 31.

Maplewood Construction Corp. of Holtsville, N.Y., had low bid of $68,340 to clean 110 bridges on I-390 and Route 390 in Livingston and Monroe counties. The work will begin on I-390 near Dansville and continue north, ending where Route 390 meets the Lake Ontario State Parkway. The job is set for completion by Oct. 15 of this year.
